in the position of successful use of that kind of tactic."

The United States has warned Iran not to try to close the Strait of Hormuz, but Mr. Shultz's remarks came in the context of overall U.S. policy in the Iran-Iraq war.

When a reporter said Mr. Shultz. seemed to be showing a tilt in policy toward Iraq, Mr. Shultz replied, "I don't have any comment

The Iran-Iraq war, which began in 1980, has been troublesome for the United States. Because of its close ties to Iraqi allies, such as Saudi Arabia, the United States has not wanted to see Iraq lose. On the other hand, the United States has worried that if Iran lost, it might call for Soviet aid.

U.S. policy has been one of strict neutrality, urging other countries to try to end the war and not to support either Iran or Iraq. The fact that this policy has not pro-duced results has caused growing frustration in Washington. Moreover, since Iraq is an adversary of Syria, some U.S. officials have said that if Iraq were strength-ened it might use its influence st Syria and put pressure on the Syrians to pull out of Lebanon. Last spring, when reports from Paris indicated that France was going to supply Iraq with the Super Etendard planes, the United States

Ath-Thawra said in a long analysis that it also thought the U.S. attitude on the Gulf war was shifting toward acceptance of "a decisive Iraqi step" against Iranian oil installations to force Iran to accept peace talks.

By Thomas L. Friedman New York Times Service BEIRUT - Hundreds of civilians have been killed in Lebanon in the last two months, according to the available evidence. At least some of the victims, judging from appearances, were killed on masse in a cold-blooded and ruthless manner, without regard to age, sex or involvement in the fighting.

The slayings grew out of the fighting that erupted between the Druze and the Christian Phalangist milities as they battled for control of the Chuf mountains and the Aley district after the Israeli withdrawal Sept. 4. Since then, the Christians and the Druze have repeatedly accused each other of massacres of civilians.

Nonetheless, even with these restraints, much can be said about the massacre stories.

The first major battle of the recent fighting, and the one that elicited the most allegations of massacres, was fought in Bhamdoun.

Fadi Frem, commander of the Christian Phalargist militia, said in an interview last week that 500 Christian civilians were killed by the Druze in 56 villages of the Chuf mountains. He said 200 to 300 ci-

Peace Talks Set At Beirut Airport

Choice of Site Leaves \overline{U} nclear Whether Druze Will Agree

By William Claiborne Washington Post Service

BEIRUT — The Lebanese gov-ernment said Tuesday that the long-awaited conference of leaders of the country's warring factions would be held Thursday at Beiru; International Airport despite con-tinued heavy fighting in that area.

However, it was unclear Tuesday night whether the Druze, one of the main combatants, would take part. A spokesman for the Druze po-litical faction, the Progressive Socialist Party, called the airport "completely unacceptable" as a site for the conference, and in Damas-cus an aide to Walid Jumblat, the party's leader, expressed surprise at the selection of the airport as the site, saying it presented security problems.

Intense fighting between Lebanese Army troops and Shiite Moslem militiamen cootinued throughout the day Tuesday in the vicinity of the airport, south of Beirut. But President Amin Gemayel's government said that the national reconciliation conference, designed to end eight years of civil war and decades of bitter rivalry between religinus and pulitical groups, would be protected by the multina tional peacekeeping force.

The Beirut airport also has long been a symbol of Lebanon's resil-iency amid civil chaos, reopening quickly after the worst periods of violence and even flying Middle East Airlines planes in and out of the capital during combat nearby.

But the Lebanese Army was forced to close the main road to the airport Tuesday during a period of sniper fite, remuting traffic through narrow coastal streets.

A U.S. Marine spokesman said that several rounds of sniper fire from the Shiite Moslem area west of the airport were directed at a Marine foward position in university science buildings, where a Marine captain had been killed during a fierce firefight Sunday night.

Tank and artillery shells fired by the Lebanese Army also fell on nearby Borge Barajni, where snipers were reported to be dug in the vicinity of the Chatila Roundabout, a main junction in the town.

The army said that at least four persons, including two soldiers, had been killed in exchanges of rocket, grenade and small-arms fire in the Shiite oeighborhoods. (Related photo, Page 2)

The snipers were not identified by faction, but U.S. officials said they appeared to be from the radical Hezbollah, or Party of God, which aligns itself with Iran's lead-er, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

SAN SALVADOR - Roberto d'Aubuisson, president of the Con-stiment Assembly and a former army major who frequently has been linked to death squads, has reportedly declared that the ultraright murder teams come from the official Salvadoran armed forces.

Mr. d'Aubuisson made the accusation during an appearance last Wednesday before the U.S. com-mission on Central America, according to commission sources. The commission is headed by Henry A. Kissinger.

Although U.S. officials have long believed the killers were offduty soldiers or security officers. the official U.S. and Salvadoran government positions have been that the death squads operate outside the control and against the orders of the military hierarchy. Military and civilian leaders frequently allege that rightist civilians such as Mr. d'Aubuisson control the souads. In a tense exchange with com-ssion members over his alleged role with the death squads, Mr. d'Auhuisson reportedly denied guilt and instead provided the first accusation in such a forum by a high-level Salvadoran official of direct responsibility of the armed forces and their leadership.

The former security forces officer said middle- and lower-level officers were involved in the political murder squad and added that the responsibility should be given to their superiors, the sources said. He did not name the superiors.

But in the context, he appeared to be referring to officers of the army, the National Police, the Treasury Police and the National Guard, which along with the navy are known collectively as the armed

The existence of military-run death squads was tacitly acknowle edged during years of direct military rule until they ostensibly were abolished after a coup by junior army officers in 1979.

Mr. d'Aubuisson, who worked as a chief aide to the presidential command which at the time was said to be directing the squads, was one of a oumber of officers removed in post-coup purges.

As it has become apparent that the same kind of death-squad activity still exists, the U.S.-supported government of President Alvaro Magaña, which took over after the same 1982 elections that brought Mr. d'Aubuisson to office as legislative leader, consistently has sought to distance itself from the killings. It has depicted the death squads as unknown and uncontrolled elements on the fringe of the Mr. d'Aubuisson's comments

The Earth Is Warming Up Faster Than Expected 'Greenhouse Effect' to Bring Major Changes Starting in 1990s, EPA Warns

WASHINGTON - The Environmeotal Protection Agency warns in a report that the warming of the Earth, known as the greenhouse effect, will begin to occur in sions are stationed, the appropriate missile units have tactical ouclear the 1990s.

John S. Hoffman, director of strategic studies for the agency, said in an interview Monday: "We are trying to get people to realize that changes are coming sooner than they expected. Major changes will be here by the years 1990 to 2000, and we have to learn how to live with them."

Reagan Aides Urging Accelerated Anti-Missile Development

By Patrick E. Tyler Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan's national security advisers are urging him to support an accelerated five-year program allotting $18 billion to $27 billion to develop space-based and other weapons for intercepting nuclear missiles fired at Western

The recommendation, which comes from Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger and William P. Clark, the president's outgoing national security af-fairs adviser, follows months of study by scientists and policy analysts. The new defensive weapons that it envisions could have serious implications for the U.S.-Soviet strategic arms control talks now under way.

The United States and the Soviet Union signed an Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty in 1972 in which both sides agreed "not to develop, test or deploy ABM systems or components which are sea-based, airbased, space-based or mobile land-based."

Details of the highly classified report with the recommendations were published Monday in Aviation prepared for the president four funding options for an Week & Space Technology.

The interagency group, headed by Mr. Weinberger and Mr. Clark, distilled the work of two Pentagon panels, which studied both the scientific feasibility of developing defensive space-based weapons and the political and policy-making impact of abandoning the 30-year U.S. policy of deterring nuclear war and limiting the arms race through concentrating resources on offensive nuclear weapons only.

The diplomat quoted an embassy report from Kabul, the Afghan capital, which spoke of a five-day attack on the town of Istalif by MiG fighter-bombers, helicopter gunships, artillery batteries and tank fire. The barrage, beginning Oct. 12, reportedly flattened nearly half the town of 5,000, located 15 miles (24 kilometers) north of Kabul. Casualties were said to be high.

Two rebel commanders were said to have been killed in the assault on Istalif, a base for many guerrillas, although a majority of the insurgents reportedly escaped the bombardment to nearby villages in the Salang Pass. During Iulis in the bombing, Soviet troops visited the town with a list of buildings where rebels had reportedly lived and set those houses on fire, the diplomat reported.

Comecon Is Urged to Be Self-Reliant

BERLIN (AP) - Prime Minister Nikolai A. Tikhonov of the Soviet Union urged more self-reliance Tuesday for the Moscow-led trade and economic community to counter embargoes imposed by the West

In an address opening a three-day summit meeting in East Berlin of prime ministers from the 10-nation Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Comecon), he called on the group to organize joint production of machines, equipment and materials "the sale of which is being restricted by the West." President Ronald Reagan has led a Western campaign to restrict the exportation of sophisticated technology, especially computers, to Soviet-bloc countries because of military applications.

A Comecon report outlining progress since the last prime ministers' session a year ago in Budapest said the group had already undertaken stens to improve cooperation in "electronic components, microprocessing technology, robot technology and color television."

Austria Tries 9 Accused of Nazism

VIENNA (Reuters) - Eight Austrians and a West German charged with engaging in Nazi activities went on trial Tuesday amid tight security in the biggest case of its kind in Austria in the past decade.

The West German defendant, Ekkehard Weil, 33, is also charged with instigating bomb attacks on Jewish-owned textile shops in Salzburg and Vienna and on the Vienna bomes of prominent Jewish citizens.

The charges are connected with a series of attacks that started in February 1982 when a bomb exploded in front of the house of Vienna's chief rabbi, Akkiba Eisenberg, in August 1982, Mr. Weil and eight other men were arrested and charged with Nazi activities, banned under the Austrian Constitution. The trial is expected to last until mid-December.

Iraq Accused of Executions. Torture

LONDON (AP) - The Iraqi government has executed 520 political prisoners since 1978 and has reportedly tortured 23 other people to death since 1976, Amnesty International alleged in a report to be released

The London-based human rights organization called on the government of President Saddam Hussein to halt executions for nonviolent political offenses "as a first step towards abolition." It also called on the Iraqi government to investigate the reported torture deaths and introduce safeguards to protect prisoners.

The Amnesty report was compiled by a team of investigators, led by Mr. Kirkland has pressed for 'the organization's secretary-general, Thomas Hammarberg of Sweden, prosecution of the killers of two who visited Iraq in January. The Iraqi government has denied that there have been any political executions or torture.

Kirkpatrick Stays Silent About Her Career Plans

By David Shribman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, the U.S. representative at the United Nations, has said that she intends to remain at her post through the end of this year's General Assembly session, but de-clined to say what she would do

Mrs. Kirkpatrick has been portrayed as being irritated at the se-lection of Robert C. McFarlane as President Ronald Reagan's national security adviser and at reports that she might be offered an advisory job in the administration. She is said to have wanted the national security adviser's post herself.

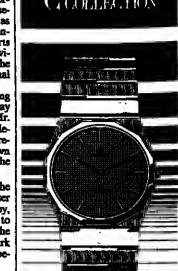

Mrs. Kirkpatrick had a long meeting with Mr. Reagan Monday before the announcement of Mr. McFarlane's selection. In a telephone interview afterward, she refused to provide details of her own plans or even to confirm that she and Mr. Reagan had met.

She and Mr. McFarlane, now the had been the top two candidates to replace William P. Clark as the national security adviser. Mr. Clark was nominated Thursday to become secretary of the interior.

"I naturally respect the right of the president to appoint anybody in a position in his administration that be chooses," Mrs. Kirkpatrick said. "And, of course, I warmly support his decisions. And I am committed to serving through the General Assembly.

The current session of the General Assembly is scheduled to conclude Dec. 20. White House aides said Mr. Reagan had hoped to offer Mrs. Kirkpatrick a post as a senior foreign policy adviser in Washington. It was not clear whether sh had indicated her intentions to the president, but she has been depicted as reluctant to accept another post in the administration

a series of proposals for "fairer income tax treatment" of the two million EC nationals who work in another EC state, including 200,000 "frontier workers."

Current laws treating nonresidents unfairly in tax matters, the commission said in a report Tuesday, may "interfere with the freedom of movement of persons and the freedom to provide services within the community" as guaran-teed by the EC's founding treaty.

Its proposals call on EC states to grant the same tax breaks to residents and nonresidents and added it knew numerous cases of unfair treatment of nonresidents, including the following:

The staff of a French school in Italy must make French social secontributions but can get no relief from them."

• A firm of international accountants moved its offices from Paris to Brussels to find that pay-ments to the firm's pension fund established in France "were no longer recognized for tax pur-poses" in Relgium.

Mondale Rejects Concern Over Attacks on Glenn

By Jack Nelson

Los Angeles Times Service WASHINGTON - Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale, responding to Senator John Glenn's warnings that bickering between the two front-runners for the Democratic presidential nomination could damage the ultimate nomince, says that differences between the two are fundamental and that he will continue to attack the Ohio senator's record.

But Democratic Party officials are increasingly concerned that if the Mondale-Glenn fend persists, it will shatter party unity and hort the Democrats' chances against President Ronald Reagan next year. In fact, party officials plan to meet with campaign managers of the seven declared Democratic candidates and urge that they refrain from attacking each other and instead reserve their criticism for Mr. Reagan, who Monday signed a let-ter legally making him a candidate

Mr. Glean, who has engaged in several sharp exchanges with Mr. Mondale during the past week, has already called for a cease-fire.

But on Monday, Mr. Mondale, saying that Mr. Reagan's economic program was the "most profound domestic issue" he had seen in his career, added: "I was against Reapanomics. Glenn was for it. That's a fundamental. And I don't see how we can serve the public by trying to avoid discussion

Mr. Mondale discussed his differences with Mr. Glenn at a Los Angeles Times Washington Bureau breakfast session at which Mayor Tom Bradley of Los Angeles disclosed he is supporting Mr. Mon-dale and plans to campaign for Earlier, Mr. Glenn, reacting to a comment by Mr. Mondale, that the senator was basing his campaign on support of Reaganomics, said, "Can you imagine anything more stupid than that? And feel free to use that as a direct quote." Mr. continued, "and w Gleon accused Mr. Mondale of cit-the party united."

various other aspects of the president's economic program.

And the senator, who countered Mr. Mondale's charge by saying be. voted for the tax cut only as an alternative to the "disastrous, failed" economic policies of the Carter administration, made it clear he was ready to continue the battle if Mr. Mondale persisted in accusing him of supporting Rea-

"If I'm attacked in these areas, obviously I'm going to respond," said Mr. Glenn, although he exressed concern that "when candidates start hacking away at each other, it can cause a serious problem for whoever gets the nomina-

ing his record out of context and said that although he had voted for man, Charles T. Manatt, and other Mr. Reagan's 25-percent tax cut, he party officials are so concerned had cast about 30 votes against about the potential damage from a continuing fend that they plan to urge Mr. Mondale, Mr. Glean and the other five candidates to refrain from making harsh attacks on each other during the campaign for the nomination. The matter will be taken up next week at a regularly scheduled party meeting.

Party officials plan to suggest that the candidates informally agree to adopt a version of the Republican Party's "lith com-mandment," which stipulates that candidates shall not speak ill of other Republicans.

Mr. Mondale said Monday that, although he believes a campaign must be conducted "in a civilized in," the idea that "you would have on."

Death of an Intellectual

Until recently, Raymond Aron was better appreciated in the United States than in France. It was only with the recent publication of his memoirs that the French public and the French intellectual community have fully acknowledged the stature of this calm and scholarly commentator upon contemporary history. With his death, the loss suddenly is felt as much on the left as on the right.

In the United States, Raymond Aron was known and highly regarded as early as the 1950s, for his journalism and for his books on war and totalitarianism ("The Century of Total War") and Marxism ("The Opium of the Intellectuals"). It was said by his critics that Americans liked him because he was anti-Marxist and anti-communist at a time when the European intelligentsia - the French, above all - was pro-Marxist and anti-American. But there was much more to it than that.

Raymond Aron was valued by Americans because he offered a model of how to be anti-Marxist and anti-totalitarian. At a time when the utopian expectations of the 1930s and 1940s had been discredited by Stalinism, yet the campaign against Stalinism and communism was being dominated in the United States by clownish demagogues and humorless reactionaries, Raymond Aron showed how to be lucid and objective, committed and bumane. He once quoted an Englishman's remark that "controversies between intellectuals about the destiny of intellectuals play as big a part in French life as love and food" - while ruefully admitting that his own work was very much a part of this. But then he added that while Anglo-Saxons may pragmatically create political and social institutions, the French translate these into immortal ideas.

"The French intelligentsia," he said, "is torn between the aspiration to universality and the special circumstances of the national situation; between attachment to democratic ideas and a taste for aristocratic values; between love of liberty and revolt against the power and technical civilization of the United States; between moral inspiration and the acceptance of cynicism, the alleged condition of effectiveness. Because of these conflicts, the French intelligentsia represents more than itself."

Because of his own passionate commitment to ideas and to truth, Raymond Aron, too, stood for more than himself. He stood for what is most admirable in French intellectual life, and what is best and most honorable in the two professions that he served throughout his life, those of scholar and of journalist

A Reagan Campaign

The Reagan campaign organization — offi-cially called Reagan-Bush '84 — set up shop Monday. In name and appearance, Reagan-Bush '84 resembles other presidential campaigns; in practice the campaign organization of an incumbent president is unlike any other. Other candidates usually struggle to get a few prominent politicians and officeholders to make endorsements. But the Reagan campaign staff has been spending much of its time the last few weeks inventing titles and co-chairmanships enough to accommodate all the politicos -- some of them bitter rivals -- who want high posts in the president's campaign.

Other campaigns often concentrate on building grass-roots organizations in key primary and caucus states. Reagan-Bush '84 has evidently spent little time yet in doing that, There are already Republican parties, at least on paper, in most places, and Mr. Reagan has no serious rivals for the nomination. Other campaigns struggle to raise money, Reagan-Bush '84 can raise the $16 million it is allowed to raise from private givers as sure as six o'clock follows five.

Other campaigns also struggle to get even a little attention for their candidates. But all the world is watching Ronald Reagan. Everyone will see more of what he does as president, all the way up through October 1984, than what his campaign's ads on television or radio or newspapers or direct mail say he does. Other candidates give vague hints of possible ap-pointees; they themselves doo't know who their secretary of state will be. Mr. Reagan has named a new national security adviser - a decision that tells much about the kind of foreign policy he intends to follow. Other candidates can tell us that they have the capacity to react well to crises. But we can watch how Mr. Reagan handles them.

Of course it will be useful to watch the Reagan-Bush '84 media strategy, since it should present succinctly the message and themes the president wants delivered; and it will be interesting to see the campaign's managers struggle to keep every Republican politico happy with his place at the national convention in Dallas. But the media campaign is not scheduled to begin until March. Meanwhile, Reagan-Bush '84 will do the things a president's campaign organization does, all on the assumption that Mr. Reagan will do what his advisers have been telling us since last spring he would surely do by July or August or October, but which he refrained specifically from doing in his statement authorizing the committee to work in his behalf: make a formai decision to run for a second term.

The Meeting in Athens

Socialist prime ministers from five Southern European countries gave a display of disagreement at their meeting in Athens. Neither their common political convictions nor their supduced the hoped-for harmony on some fundamental issues of European politics.

Most glaringly, the meeting of the prime ministers of France, Greece, Italy, Portugal and Spain has given no new impetus to the weary negotiations for the admission of Portugal and Spain to the Common Market. After the sessions had ended, Pierre Mauroy of France raised oo hopes at all that French delaying tactics might be abandoned. On the contrary, opportunities to spin out the negoti-ations will multiply at the beginning of next year when, for a period of six months, France assumes the presidency of the EC.

Lebanization of America

Americans may be witnessing, without consciously recognizing, the Lebanization of their country. Persuasive and steadily more frequent evidence suggests that the United States is beginning to resemble Lebanon in its political and social structure, formal and informal, a phenomenon which, given Lebanon's current, past and probable future troubles, ought not to

Is the United States a nation? Perhaps not, to the sense of its Latin derivative, meaning a tribe, a group of people born of the same stock, often remembering a common ancestor. Like Lebanon, the United States is an amalgam or conglomerate of tribes, a deliberate political construct designed to accommodate all to their mutual benefit. To endure, such a precarious experiment requires an individual or group consciousness of belonging, an assumption of membership and primacy of loyalty, not to tribe or sect but to a common larger tradition.

Lebanon is organized into 17 different sects. Each sect has large measures of antonomy in the educational, legal and political fields. Some are divided within themselves.

Primary loyalty is to clan and then to sect, with allegiance to Lebanon a poor third in influence. The grisly consequence for the last eight years and for the foresecable future is

There seems no immediate danger of such a development here. But American sectarianism. always present at the level of voluntary association and personal and group choice, has in the years since the civil rights revolution be-come fixed in the law of the land.

Affirmative action programs, which call quotas "goals," attempt to parcel out jobs, educational opportunities and housing on what amounts to a sectarian basis. The entire American population is divided by law and administrative fiat into categories of the legally advantaged and disadvantaged. The potential consequences for disintegration of the sense of national community — Lebanization are daily more apparent.

Before the trend overwhelms, Congress and the courts should re-examine and restore the principle that the government should regard each individual citizen with indifferent respect and affection.

The Dollar and the Shekel

For a long time the dollar has been practically legal tender in Israel. Tourists know something about that, having eaten in restaurants in Jerusalem or Tel Aviv where the prices on the menus are in dollars.

But a country's money is a symbol of its national independence. To suppress the country's currency, for the Israelis, would have been to lend support to those who deny the very existence of the state.

The noise of the fraces brought reinforcements from the neighboring police station, which were re-ceived by rifleshots from the turbulent soldiers, who had ranged the populace on their side. The police were forced to retire to their barricades, where the rioters pursued them. Firing continued for over an hour: 10 policemen were wounded, and several of their agressors were also hurt. That greater bloodshed did not occur is due to the coolness of the police. Comparative calm has been restored.

1933: Prince Ali Visits Paris

PARIS — Declining to comment on recent political developments in the kingdom of Iraq, over which his younger brother, the late King Peisal, reigned, Prince Ali, the former King of the Hedjas, declared [Oct. 18] that he is mak-ing his first visit to Paris, incognito, for pleasure and not for reasons of state. "Even in faraway Baghdad we have heard of the charms of Paris," said the Arab prince. Prince Ali is enthusiastic about the emancipation of women in Iraq. The Lebanese capital is ravaged. Armed men and military machines are everywhere. You still have to make a detour when bursts of automatic gunfine crupt a block or two down the road. here is a cease-fire, but still po peace.

Damascus seems to be thriving. The broad avenues of the new city, cutting through a forest apartment buildings, are open and calm. Tanks and armored vehicles that made up much of the traffic last year are rare.

A parade of notables from the Gulf and more distant regions come to pay calls on President Hafez al-Assad, as though to a new court. They bring tribute, and pleas to open the pipeline for Iraq's oil. Arab officials calculate that Syna is making at least $600 million a year from Iran by keeping the pipeline closed, partly by getting free oil and partly by simply not paying for the cheap Iranian oil that it resells.

After Israeli destruction of his newest weapons last year in Lebanon and after literally razing the rebellious city of Hama, President Assad has made his capital a picture of peace. There are no echoes of the rain of shells in

It could mean renewal of murderous fighting if Mr. Assad is frustrated. Or it could mean endorsement of Mr. Gemayel's effort to promote basic reforms in hope of stilling Leba-non's internal feeds. Syria has a heavy hand in them, but the resulting instability is also a problem for Syria.

There can be no question of Mr. Gemayel's dedication to reforms. His position has been distorted for rival factional purposes, but it is hazy in specifics. He wants de facto partition, quite clear. He wants complete secularization, an end to confessional privileges and to the quota system that puts religious affiliations ahead of individual merit in access to public jobs, and modernization of society.

It is a bold position, but it is not in conflict with the nonclerical and national approach of the Syrian Baathist regime. Amin, as he is called, carries the baggage of his myledding father, Pierre, and his murdered brother Bashir. But he is trying to shed it and build a real nation on the chaotic mossic of factions. His complaint about America's approach is that he sees it as asking the horse to push the cart, requiring Lebanon to straighten itself out before those who are pulling and shoving in opposite directions give it a chance.

Saceb Salem, the elderly former Lebanese prime minister, remembers that when he was a schoolboy he wrote in his books, "Berrut, Syria." Between the two World Wars, he said, Moslems resented the detachment of Lebanon from Greater Syria. Now there is a consensus for Lebanese nationhood. The problem is how to make it work between the tugs of two strong and adamant neighbors, Israel and newly selfconfident Syria.

Two seeming proxies — Afghanistan, for the Soviet Union, and Pakistan, for the United States — sit in separate rooms and negotiate. Diego Cordóvez, the UN undersecretary, consults with India, Iran, the United States, the Soviet Union. It seems a charade.

The deposed king, Mohammad Zahir Shah, has come forward to say that if the Russians are serious they must allow the Afghan fighters to sit at the table. Most Afghans I met inside Afghanistan would support him. Yet the main resistance groups, in Peshawar, Pakistan, are divided.

Pakistan, a collection of warring tribes, is itself divided, but it could do much to help strengthen the resistance. It is not without incentives to do so: Military forces have violated its borders 12 times this year. The United States, which supplies Pakistan with military aid, should put pressure on Pakistan to get the resistance to unite and bring it to Geneva. If the Russians are serious about peace, they must negotiate with their true opponents. The United States should stand with the Afghans, or stop its anti-communist rhetoric.

France the biggest public sector of any noncommunist industrial state.

He also launched a hyper-Keynesian program of demand-management, pumping purchasing power into consumers' pockets. The mini-mum wage, pensions, family allowances and housing allowances all rose. He promised 200,000 more public-sector jobs, and reduced the work week to 39 hours; paid vacations went to five weeks. The result? Before Mr. Mitterrand had finished his second year, the franc had been devalued three times. Mr. Mitterrand is the best president of France that foreign tourists have ever had. They can buy francs at oearly eight to the dollar and head for Hermes. French tourists are allowed to take abroad only $265 a year. That limit was part of perhaps the most abrupt U-turn any democracy has experienced. Last March, Mr. Mitterrand submitted a severe deflationary budget to siphon demand out of consumers' pockets. His aides dis-like the word "austerity," preferring "socialist rigor." The rigor includes an income-tax surcharge, a forced loan by individuals to the government of 10 percent of last year's in-come tax, spending and wage

Mr. Mitterrand chose rigor because he had no choice: The currency was collapsing. But his heart is in supply-side socialism - the use of nationalized credit to energize nationalized high-technology industries. "High-tech industrialism" should involve, among other things, robotics on automobile assembly lines. That is one of the reasons for a plan to lay off nearly 10 percent of Peugeot's 80,000 workers. Unions that have supported Mr. Mitterrand do not share his enthusiasm.

LETTER

Whose Truth?

Regarding "A Propaganda War That Both Sides Lose" (IHT, Oct. 13) by William Pfaff.

Mr. Pfaff's column on the Soviet destruction of flight KAL 007 must delight Soviet propagandists who have been trying to obscure the issues raised by that tragic event.

Mr. Pfaff asserts that "The Soviet.

Union has been telling the truth about this. It did not know that the plane was a passenger aircraft." He adds, "The truth about the episode, as apparently has been known in Washington since mid-September, is not what America has been telling" The U.S. government has reported all the facts as soon as they have been substantiated. Regarding the late-blooming assertion of the Russians, which Mr. Pfaff cited, the State Department commented, "We do not know for sure, and may never know, whether the Soviets recognized that KAL 007 was a civilian aircraft before they shot it down." The truth is that the Soviet Union has stonewalled, then lied repeatedly about the downing of the plane. The truth is that the Russians have made massive efforts to mask the issues raised by their unprovoked aggression: safety of the skies; compensation for families of victims: Soviet disdain for human life, international law and world opinion. JOHN L. HEDGES, U.S. Information Agency.

People of Quake-Struck Italian Town 'Rebelling' Against Living Conditions

By Kevin Costelloe The Associated Press

POZZUOLI, Italy - "The people are rebelling," a policeman said as he watched more than 60 persons displaced by 11 months of earth tremors shouting and pushing their way toward the mayor's office in this town on the Bay of

The displacement of more than 22,000 people has forced government officials to take over empty vacation homes and apartments as emergency lodgings.

The situation could get worse. Gennaro Narcisio, an official of the city's office that monitors earth movements, said, "You can't exclude the possibility that one day the monten total purchase causing Pozzuoli and sometimes causing the ground to shake more than 100 times a day, may one day come breaking through to the surface in an explosion.

The Druze, for their part, say a massacre against their civilians took place in the village of Kfar Matta, in the hills about 10 miles (16 kilometers) southeast of Beirut.

Kfar Matta remained relatively quiet until July, when the Druze, saying the Lebanese Army was harassing their people, tried forcibly to evict the army from the town,

Gold Medal THE WATER WATER TO SERVE

EN-ROUTE TOWARDS A GLOBAL COMMUNICATIONS NETWORK. WITH PHILIPS

Official emblem of the World Communications Year 1983 symbolizing the development of

This theme has been chosen by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

In recognizing "... the fundamen-== tal importance of communications infrastructures as an essential element in the economic and social development of all countries...", the General Assembly of the United Nations chose the Develop-== ment of Communications Infrastructures as the theme for World Communications Year 1983. The ultimate goal is to achieve a fully-integrated global telecommunications network. One that will satisfy both the sophisticated demands of industrialized society and the fundamental requirements of developing nations. It is an aspiration which will bring enormous benefits to us all in the future. And the technology that is needed is available today.

From Philips, for example. We have developed, and installed, digital transmission systems utilizing hair-thin strands of optical fibre, capable of carrying unprecedented volumes of voice, image, text and data information. Our Stored-Program-Controlled telephone exchanges are used by many countries to form the nucleus of their public network modernization programme. Scattered communities in developed and developing nations rely on Philips rural radio/telephone systems s for daily contact. And we have systems for communicating via ship, aircraft, automobile and satellite. Business and industry, too, use Philips technology for private telex, telephone and corporate communications, word processing and information handling. Every day, millions of business transactions are processed locally and supervised centrally via our distributed-intelligence terminal systems. At both national and international levels. We also have area networking systems that bridge the communications gap between non-compatible data computers, as well as systems for the emerging Videotex and Teletex networks.

This tremendous technological versatility is based on Philips commitment to research, develop and apply ways and means of improving communications infrastructures at every level national, regional and global. A commitment that keeps Philips en-route among the leaders in the development of a global communications network.

Some examples of how Philips communications technology is serving business and government are given on the opposite page.

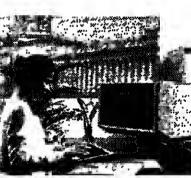

Other systems in the programme extend from single side band HF radio telephony and single channel VHF/UHF radio links to SCPC and DAMA satellite earth stations. Philips has supplied systems for rural telecommunications in Australia, Chile, Colombia, Fiji, Ecuador, Oman, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Sri Lanka, Swaziland, Thailand, Uruguay, the Solomon Islands. Yemen and many other countries.

COMMUNICATING WORD PROCESSOR

Philips new generation word processor, the P5020, combines sophisticated text processing features with advanced communications facilities. Texts can be simply edited, revised, formatted, justified and personalized. Financial calculations can be made. Details can be compiled and reported. By means of a communications controller, the P5020 can communicate with other word processors and computers, thus enabling fast inter-office messages to be exchanged. The outstanding software packages and hardware features of the P5020 have contributed to its high user-acceptance level among customers the world over. In fact, wherever it is tested and compared with competitive systems, the P5020 word processor is consistently placed at the top of the preferred list.

WIDE AREA COMMUNICATIONS Philips has developed a networking system that allows different makes of office automation and data handling equipment to communicate with each other. Called SOPHO-NET, it is an advanced packetswitched business communications network that can connect main-frame computers, mini-computers, data-bases, word processors, terminals and other hardware regardless of manufacture. Corporate, branch or departmental networking is possible as well as connection to public and : private networks up to a global level. Thus enabling users to 'reach-out' through the network for the information they require. This ability to utilize previously incompatible data, text and image information equipment within a single networking system will be of particular interest to large organisations who have invested in a variety of different 'standalone' equipment. SOPHO-NET is one of the first 'computer-manufacturer-indepen-

In Russia, Atheist Priests Coexist With Communists Who Believe

excerpt from The New York Times Magazine, has been adapted from "Russia: Broken Idols, Solemn Dreams," to be published next month in the United States by Times Books.)

By David K. Shipler

T TOOK me a full four years of living and traveling in the Soviet Union to arrive at some understanding of how minds are shaped, of how political values and social attitudes are absorbed by the young, of how it is to grow up in Russia long after the zeal of revolution has died.

Remarkably, beneath the state hierarchy's tough rules, many Russians have lost their heroes and their faith, their faith in their ideology and in their future.

The loss of faith leaves a hollow mood in Russia. A hunger gnaws. A yearning stirs. A search begins. But the striving is oot forward into a truer Marxist vision of the future but a reaching back, back into the suffering and glory of World War II to nourish national honor and heroism, back into the tight authoritarianism of Stalinist times, back into the ethnic purity and nobility of what was "Russian," back into the simplicity and mythical honesty of Russia's village life, back into the Russian Orthodox Church.

Secret Routine

The dark-haired girl of 16 was a Komsomol (Communist Youth League) activist and the daughter of two Communist Party members. In the middle of an afternoon, at the end of the school day, she walked gracefully from the hard, gray streets of Baku into the gold and candle-light of a church. Dusky icons hung framed in gilt, dim images suggesting mystery beyond the dancing gold reflections of the tiny flames. A trace of incense hung in the placid air. She crossed herself, lit a candle and bowed her head

It was a frequent after-school routine, kept secret from her mother and father. The church calmed her, gave her delicate sensations of faith, warmed her as nothing had outside. But these important feelings were held closely, the magic of her double life. I asked how she could reconcile her Communist affiliation with her religious faith. "It's easy," she said brightly. "At the Komsomol committee, when they ask if 1 be-lieve in God, I say oo."

Thus do Communism and Christianity exist, intertwining through the layers of belief and disbelief, binding conviction with hypocrisy. Party members sometimes even have their children baptized, clandestinely; the KGB puts agents in the clergy. Nothing is ever as it seems. There are priests who do oot believe in God, and Communists who do.

Communist authorities have worked hard to create "new Socialist ritualism," as Pravda called it. In the Krasnodar region on the Black Sea, a ceremonial registration of newborn babies was introduced in an effort to supplant baptism. The Ukraine formed a committee to manufacture new rituals, with appropriate costumes and pageantry to "help put bright and colorful finishing touches on ceremonies con-octed with various events in people's lives." Once the rings were exchanged, attendants hurried the party out to make room for the next couple on the assembly line. "It was awful," said our friend. "I hated it."

Church weddings have become quite a fashion as an alternative of candlelight and vestments and gold, chanting and incense and organ music. The state does not recognize the religious ceremonies, on the ground that the Soviet constitution provides for strict separation of church and state, so the couple must still have a state ceremony or at least register the marriage with state authorities. Most try to keep their church weddings secret to avoid damage to their careers. The phenomenon thus becomes unmeasurable, taking on the appearance of a vast, partly hidden celebration, contributing to an inpression of religious renaissance. Sometimes the church attracts the way a fad does, in a thin, fleeting whim of pleasure and naughtiness. Basic Soviet theory envisions the natural withering away of the church, as the aged men and women raised in its traditions die off and the younger breed of "Soviet man" rises into adulthood. This may be why the elderly are usually left to worship openly, mostly old women hunched and bundled in heavy coats, muttering prayers, kneeling on stone floors, carrying candles in trembling hands — images of a sup-posedly dying rite. The young and middle-aged, however, are the focus of official concern. To here the young away from midnight Easter services, state movie houses usually run American and West European films that can never be seen any other time; the only showings are at midnight. And for good measure, Komsomol activists and plainclothesmen ring the churches, letting through the old and screening out the young. Names are taken, and there are repercussions at schools and places of employment for those younger people caught trying to enter.

The original Soviet constitution of 1918 permitted "freedom of religious and anti-religious propaganda." If this reflected a certainty that the anti-religious would prevail, the confidence soon ebbed, and the passage was amended in 1936 to "freedom of religious worship and anti-religious propaganda." The church was thus deprived of its right to propagandize — to transmit its creed and values formally. No group study, no Sunday schools, no evangelism. The party, on the other hand, was free, even obligated, to preach atheism.

WASHINGTON — Charles Guggenheim, the political filmmaker, calls it "a meteor heading our way" that "could mean more than all the printed analysis." Former Vice President Walter F. Mondale is ignoring it. Senator John Glenn's director of communications, Greg Schneiders, has said privately that it is "better than the AFL-CIO endorsement."

It is a $27-million movie called "The Right Stuff," based oo Tom Wolfe's best-seller of 1979. It is also the "X" factor in the early season of presidential politics: a Hollywood epic that aspires to be the national portrait of the United States as it crossed the threshhold of space.

One of its leading characters is Mr. Glenn as an astronaut, the first American in orbit. With the release of "The Right Stuff," Mr. Glenn also becomes the first American to launch a presidential campaign in the glare of a movie that dramatizes his most heroic achievement.

The timing is coincidental and the effect on the Gleun campaign unknown. But like the tration. Atlas rocket that launched Mr. Glenn into space in 1962, "The Right Stuff" is a vehicle of great drawn its promise to assist the filmmakers. power, boosted by a $10-million promotion and

The movie had its premiere Sunday night in Washington and opens Friday in 250 theaters nationally. On Dec. 26, just as the 1984 election season oears, it expands to 1,000 theaters. If it is a hit, $500,000 a week in advertising will be spent to sustain its run, and about 20 million people will see it by April 1.

In the spring of 1982, three weeks before filming was to begin on "The Right Stuff," its producer. Robert Chartoff, boarded a plane to Washington for an emergency mission.

His movie was to delve behind the scenes into the origins of the space program and the selection, training, private lives and heroic stature of the astronauts, among them Mr. Glenn. To make it, Mr. Chartoff needed the cooperation of the National Aeronautics and Space Adminis-

The Establishment Vs. Street Motifs

nai Heraid Tribune DARIS -- Valentino's collection on Monday and Marithé and François Girbaud's Tuesday emchasized the split between establishment dressing and street fash-ion. Both are valid, but they cater to different people — a case of money and the generation gap.

or Dior, Valentino is a high fashion designer whose ready-to-wear is basically a watered-down version of his couture collection.

The Italian designer is based in Rome, but he shows in Paris because he feels, with good reason, tele. It has taken nun una accepted, but now he is very much part of the scene. He is welcomed because his clothes, super-refined and full of life and color, have a built-in optimism: they exide a basic sexiness that make him universally accepted.

A lot of bright poppy red, often mixed with soft beige, was an interesting and very Italian color combination.

The carriage-trade angle is never more prominent than at Valen-tino's who uses the most incurious fabrics around - including dots against a shimmering, brocade ckground. Sweaters were always of cashmere and accessories included exquisite sandals with soles sparkling with sequins and ribbons.

Details are what make Valentino special. The back of a pleat was often lined with the same fabric as the biouse, and back portholes were filled in with contrasting cutout lattice embroidery. Valentino did an encore of his last season's bullfighter's sweater, with embroidered and fringed sleeves, but in cotton this time. 'Madame Butterfly': Choose Your Version

By David Stevens International Herald Tribune

Paris — The current series of performances of "Madame Butterfly" at the Paris Opéra may look like a concession to the standard repertory in an adventurous season, but there is a didactic twist: Four of the 15 scheduled performances are of Puccini's original version, the one that bombed at the La Scala world premiere on Feb. 17, 1904, and was immediately taken off the boards.

Aside from the musical interest in hearing the first version alongside the "traditional" one, an exercise the Teatro La Fenice in Venice also did last season, there is a Paris chapter to the story. Although "Butterfly" achieved public success with a first revision - in Brescia, Toscanini conducting — three months after the Milan debacle, Puccini continued to make changes as the opera made its successful way around European opera houses.

When it reached the Opéra Comique in Paris in late 1906, as related in the program by Julian Smith, Puccini acceded to a number of cuts and changes demanded by Albert Carre, director of the Comique, many of which became made Pinkerton less of a vulgar, condescending the event, of the first performances of each Original version, Oct. 20, 29, Nov. 18.

heel, and a confrontation between Kate Pinker-ton and Butterfly was suppressed. In any case, the two versions being given here are two different things, and the changes be-tween first thoughts and afterthoughts are not all for the better. The first version has about 30 minutes more running time than the familiar one, and its unconventional structure, relatively unscrimental story and adventurous musi were all more or less squeezed into a traditional Italian operatic mold in the revising.

That it became more compact, effective and popular in the same process is hard to dispute.

Yet, however glad the tenor might be to have "Addio, fiorito asil" to sing in the final act, it is mawkish and unconvincing alongside the origi-nal brisk scene in which the pusillanimous Pinkerton flees. And it is possible to regret the loss of all the local color and little character scenes of Act 1 while admitting that they do go on a bit. This flair for colorful detail remained in Puccini's arsenal, however, as in Act 1 of "Girl of the Golden West" and almost all of "Gianni Schic-

And although Samaritani presumably would of intentionally load the dice, he nonetheless found more to be original about in staging the original version, and much to be banal and slapdash about in the later version.

Despite this, the audience's reaction at the end of the first act of the original version was surprisingly tepid, suggesting that perhaps that 1904 Milanese audience's hostility was not all that aberrant. Sooner or later the public has the

It tells of Seymour, a meek, bespectacled employee of a skid-row flower shop, who nurtures an odd plant that looks like a prickly pear to swell to the size of a whale with shark's jaws and a shark's penchant for raw meat, preferably human.

The hotanical wonder brings the apprentice florist fame and fortune, but soon finds its voice and in resounding rock bellows for food. Seymour feeds it a sadistic dentist, his rival for the affections of a lisping blonde shop assistant, and then his domineering boss. The evening ends with dangling greenery de-scending on the first six rows of the auditorium.

One feels that the last-minute warning that deadly plants are stretching out their tentacles to devour us all should be emphasized with a flower shower of the entire orchestra and the balcony as well, or the rest of the customers will complain of being cheated.

Japan Is Acting To Ease Tension Over Trade Gap ments of stainless sheet, coil and TOKYO - Japan has agreed to U.S. import quotas on specialty-steel products, has called on makers of quartz watches to limit exports to the European Community and reportedly is planning to push forward tariff reductions.

The minister of international trade and industry, Sosuke Uno, said Tuesday that Japan had agreed to limit exports of specialty steel to the United States for the year ending next July 19. He said the accord had been approved by the cabinet and was expected to be signed Tuesday in Washington.

Government sources said the quota for the specialty-steel ex-ports is set at about 22,180 metric tons, 32 percent of total imports from Japan and the EC permitted by the United States.

The quota includes 12,500 tons of stainless-steel rod and 4,080 tons of alloy tool steel, the sources said. Exports to the United States of these and stainless steel bars totaled 26,900 tons in 1982-83.

Mr. Uno declined to give details but said the agreement included an export quota for stainless-steel bar, stainless-steel rod and alloy tool steel, and tariff increases by the United States on Japanese ship-

The ministry also said it has called on four major Japanese quartz watch makers to limit exports to the EC in the current quarter ending in December. The four makers are Casio Computer Co., K. Hattori & Co., Orient Watch Co. and Citizen Watch Co. The ministry declined to give details, but the economic daily Nihon Keizai Shimbun said the four were asked to limit volume of exports to 10 percent above the year-earlier

Japan also is expected to bring forward planned tariff cuts in an effort to improve relations with the United States before President Ronald Reagan's visit next month, government sources said Tuesday.

The cabinet is likely to approve measures on Friday to reduce tar-iffs on more than 1,000 products by an average of 5 percent starting in April, one year ahead of schedule. the sources said.

The cuts would apply to imports from North America and Europe. The cuts would be part of a package the Japanese government has en considering to reverse Japan's burgeoning trade surplus,

Under the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations, Japan planned to cut import tariffs on about 1,500 items in the 1985-86 financial year. But farm products are likely to be excluded from this week's list of reductions because of ressure from Japan's influential farm lobby, the sources said. In the first balf of Japan's fiscal year, which began April 1, Japan posted a customs-cleared trade surplus of $12.63 billion, more than twice the figure a year earlier.

Meanwhile, the newspaper Nibon Keizai Shimbun reported that the United States, Japan, the European Community and Canada igreed during talks in Ottawa last month to move up the tariff cuts. The newspaper said the cuts, of 5 to 6 percent, applied to more than 1,200 items, and a further 40 items were being considered.

Japanese exports to the United States were valued at $21.5 billion in the fiscal first half, 15.3 percent more than a year earlier, while U.S. exports to Japan rose only 0.4 percent to $12.45 billion, the Finance

International Banking Slows Dramatically

By Carl Gewirtz

PARIS - Growth in the international banking market, whose rapid expansion into a $1.7-trillion market in 20 years has frequently distressed the world's leading central banks, slowed to a near standstill in the second quarter of this year. The standard measure of overall business, gross external assets (international loans on the books of banks) expanded less than half a percentage point in the second quarter, the Bank for International Settlements reported Tuesday. But if expressed in dollar terms adjusted for exchange-rate movements, a small decline was recorded. More important, perhaps, is the first-ever decline in the level of interbank activity. With more than half the gross size of the international bank market made up of bank loans to other banks, the interbank market is considered the fountainhead for the market's

But in the second quarter, inter-bank business declined $3.9 billion. A big part of this was the "very sharp $40-billion decrease in foreign-currency interbank assets within individual reporting coun-tries." The BIS said that this was centered in Britain and was partly connected with a seasonal unwind ing of positions by Japanese banks.
BIS officials describe the decline in interbank activity as "intriguing" but are unwilling to draw any ed last week that six computer conclusions until further data is tapes used for testing new programs were stolen from its information-processing center at Lausanne, 70 kilomaters (44 miles) from Geneva. Swiss Banks Taking New Measures to Plug Leaks Steps Are Response to Disclosure of Names of French Customers

HONG KONG — The Hong Kong dollar moved closer to its new official level of 7.80 to the U.S. dollar Tuesday, but banks and investors remained con-and investors remained confused about government measures aimed at restoring confidence in the currency.

The Hong Kong dollar was traded between banks at 7.87 late in the day, compared with 7.92 Monday night. Dealers reported demand from banks for U.S. currency as residents took U.S. currency as residents took

obs. currency as residents took advantage of more stable conditions to convert their savings into U.S. dollars.

Panic solling three weeks ago, sparked by uncertainty over the future of the British colony, pushed the local currency to a low of 9.50.

Overvalued Dollar Is Seen at Root Of U.S. Trade Deficit With Japan

By Don Shannon Los Angeles Times Service

WASHINGTON - An overvalned dollar is at the root of the growing U.S. trade deficit with Jaian and is costing the United states 2 million jobs, the U.S. chairman of a United States-Japan advisory commission said Tuesday.

David Packard, chairman of lewlett-Packard Inc. of Palo Alto, ommission named by President Conald Reagan and Prime Minis-er Yasuhiro Nakasone agreed that he dollar should now be at 200 yen about 220. Mr. Packard spoke at State Department news confernce before presenting the commision's interim report to Mr. Rea-

CM to Pay $42.5 Million in Bias Case; Settlement Called Biggest of Its Kind

WASHINGTON (AP) - General Motors Corp. agreed Tuesday to a $42.5 million settlement of a sex- and race-discrimination complaint filed 10 years ago. The amount of the settlement was said to be the largest for a bias suit in history.

Besides establishing goals for hiring and promotion of women and members of minority groups, the agreement includes a $15-million educational package designed to provide scholarships for GM employees and their family members at four-year colleges, two-year colleges and technical schools. The settlement applies to all of GM's divisions in the

The case stems from discrimination charges brought against General Motors in August 1973 by William H. Brown 3d, a former head of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, a federal agency. Mr. Brown cited Title VII, a law that forbids patterns and practices of employment discrimination in a company. The parties negotiated intermittently over the last 10 years, and an intensive effort to bring about a

"I never thought this sort of thing was legal," Mr. Yetnikoff said, It is still unclear, however, whether the Warner-Polygram merger is within the bounds of U.S. antitrust law. Warner submitted the proposed merger for government approval last month, and the Jutsice Department has not yet responded. The merger has to be approved as well by the West German

Carrian Receiver and Manager Named

HONG KONG (Reuters) - A supreme court judge has appointed two accountants as receivers and managers of Carrian Property Management Ltd. and 56 other subsidiaries of Carrian Investments Ltd., Carrian Investments said Tuesday.

The appointment was made at the request of the joint provisional liquidators of Carrian Investments Ltd. Carrian owes the equivalent of more than $1.2 billion at current exchange rates, according to Hong Kong officials, largely because of the collapse in property prices here last year.

The judge's order provides that the appointment of the two men should ant prejudice the rights of any secured creditors of the 57 subsidiaries. The 56 companies exclude all companies in the Grand Marine Holdings and China Underwriters sub-groups.

Commerzbank Sets 6-DM Dividend

FRANKFURT (Renters) -- Commerzbank will offer a dividend of 6 Deutsche marks on its 1983 earnings, Walter Seipp, the board chairman, said Tuesday. It would be the first dividend payment since 1979.

Mr. Seipp's announcement at a press conference came as the Commerzbank index of 60 leading West German shares reached a 23-year high of 989.7, up 7.9 from Monday and surpassing this year's peak of 986.3. Commerzbank said.

The index was last at these levels on September 9, 1960, when it was at 993.2. Its record, reached on Sept. 5, 1960, was 1,031.9.

Further, a satisfactory increase in consolidated cash flow and the successfull launching of the preferred share issue in June provide the group with the resources needed to pursue its ambitious investment program, focused chiefly on improving productivity, broadening the range and further development abroad.

Legrand has accordingly taken over the Dutch firm of Hekkens Apparaten Fabriek, which specializes in domestic electric fittings (1982 sales, F.Fr. 15 million). This small producer, located in Boxtel, near Eindboven, will complement Legrand Nederland's range and boost

Du Pont Plans Big

NEW YORK - Du Pont Co. said Thesday it would sell most of the assets of its Conoco Chemicals subsidiary to an investment group

The buyers include certain man-agers at Conoco Chemicals, the investment firm E.F. Hutton and Gordon A. Cain, R former Conoco vice president. The investors said the company would be reorganized as Vista Chemical Co.

The sale, to be completed early next year, is the latest in a series of major changes at Du Pont since it acquired Conoco Inc. in August 1981 in a $7.4-billion takeover that was the largest acquisition in U.S. curporate history.

Du Pont's chairman, Edward G.

Jefferson, said after the Conoco acquisition in 1981 that the company would attempt to sell $2 billion of Conoco assets by the end of 1984 to reduce the debt burden it assumed in arranging the acquisition.

Mr. Jefferson emphasized Tres-

for the sale of the Conoco Chemi-cals assets was that it did not fit with Du Pont's "overall future

Among the Conoco Chemicals managers participating in the deal are John D. Burns, an executive vice president, and E.E. Lehmkuhl and J.J. Langford, both vice presi-dents. The investors said they will organize a new company to be named Vista Chemical Co. with 1,600 employees.

The new company will make chemicals for the detergent industry at Conoco Chemical's plants in Oklahoma City, Baltimore, Lake Charles, Louisiana, Hammond, Indiana, and Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Reference of the charles of the charl as a company, although some re-maining assets will be transferred to the parent company.

Vista Chemical also will have interests in Conoco Chemicals' manufacturing affiliates in Argentina, Spain and Japan, plus its marketing units for Europe, the Far East and Latin America.

The businesses being sold by Du Pont had combined sales last year of $450 million.

ACT OF DARKNESS

By Francis King. 332 pp. $14.95. Little, Brown & Co., 34 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. 02106.

Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

BECAUSE of the stained, romantic legacy of colonialism, India has exerted a powerful hold over the British imagination; and it. has inspired such estimable achievements in fiction as E.M. Forster's "Passage to India" and Paul Scott's "Raj Quartet." Though less ambitious than those books, Francis King's excellent new novel, "Act of Darkness," belongs to the same tradition.

Set during the 1930s in colonial India, "Act of Darkness" is centered on the brutal murder of a 6-year-old English boy; and on one level, it is simply a terrific mystery story with a slip-pery, enticing plot. Did Indian insurgents steal into the house at night and draw a kitchen knife across the child's delicate throat? Or did someone in the Thompson household plan Peter's death for reasons of their own? Will the inspector on the case piece together the frag-mentary evidence in time for the inquest, or will the truth remain forever muddled?

While conventional mysteries are actually profoundly conservative in effect - offering the reader the reassurance that the virtues of reason and logic will triumph in the end —
"Act of Darkness" unfolds like an evil blossom, each layer of petals curling down to reveal another layer of ambiguity and menace. What begins as the story of an isolated, senseless, act turns into a darkly luminous parable about innocence and evil, guilt and redemption. The marder of Peter, in fact, functions like a small bomb; the force of its detonation snaps the already frail, frayed cords binding the Thompson family together, flinging them off into different directions and unraveling their secret fears and desires.

In the "Raj Quartet," of course, Paul Scott employed a similar device. He used the rape of an English girl as a springboard for his historical epic; together with its reverberations, that one event — much like the Marabar Caver incident in "Passage to India" - provided a perfect platform for examining the complicated state of British and Indian relations. Though less concerned with social and political nuances than Forster and Scott, King also uses his story to examine the anomalous condition. of Anglo-Indian life, and he sketches in that life with quick, offband strokes, creating a shimmering, if somewhat superficial, picture of their doozned, privileged rule. The corrosive sexual drives of the Thompson-family, their diminished morals and their sense of incompleteness as individuals - these, in a sense, serve as metaphors for the failures of the British Empire, just as the loss of innocence incurred by Peter's murder reflects the larger loss of innoceace that took place in the wake of World War II. Except for a few patches of portentous prose near the beginning of the book, these larger philosophical issues are so neatly statched into the story line that "Act of Darkness" not only possesses the immediacy of a good thriller but also feels like an intimate,

The first portion is written from the point-of-view of various family members — a technique reminiscent of Familiner's "As I Lay Dying" — and demonstrates King's seemingly limitless access to the personalities of his creations. Delineating their emotional machinery with quick, bright strokes, he manages to transform a group of stock, rather Kiplingesque characters into a gallery of individuals: Peter's "habitually good-natured" mother who dotes on him with obsessive care; his bluff philandering father, whose "greed for food and women is equalled by his greed for money and success;" his willful governess who hates "the mess of entangled bodies and entangled lives;" and his oddly distant stepsister, who has felt marooned among strangers ever since her own mother's

Did one of these characters have reason or motive enough to kill Peter, the precocious "changeling"? By the end of "Act of Darkness," the answer has become almost ancillary to the pleasures we have derived from King's perfectly paced unwrapping of their intercon-

The experienced campaigners of Benfica may, if their manager and their senses permit, taste the spectacular fish and even more spectacular scenery of the old port of Piracus on Wednesday. If there is a more intriguing UEFA Cup encounter on Wednesday, it is Aston Villa's visit to Moscow Spartak. Former European champion Villa was engaged in a war with its neighbor, Birmingham City, last Saturday, the game was soured by vindicative tackles during the play and, apparently, headbutting as the protagonists left the field. New York Times Service NEW YORK — The National lasketball Players Association, toether with the league, announced new program late last month ealing with the illegal use of drugs the NBA. As of this date, the ability of certain players to exercise strongly that a oeed to eliminate drug use among the players was a top priority.

When we started to negotiate on open items not covered in the most recent agreement, drug use was dis-cussed again. Most of the league officials and club owners were surprised by our point, but eventually came around to our view.

Based on recent meetings we have held with each of the players, we believe that support for the program is overwhelming among the membership. A oumber of players felt the move was long overdue. Most believe that this will help the players who need help, not punish appears to be a tough stance toward offenders was not directed toward receiving "good press." The officers of the players' group made a choice because of our belief that the time had come to stand up and make hard decisions.

If we were not to be the leaders in attacking illegal drug use now, we would be faced with reacting later, and in the process letting our members and others get severely

What were our concerns? First, we as a group were being tarnished with the brush of "all being hop-heads." The overwhelming number of players are not users of drugs, and once and for all we want to be able to convince the public. This not only makes it easier for me and in the league to hold our beads high when appearing in public, but also helps our sport.

Second, the players share in at least 53 percent of all revenues carned in our league. With the attack on illegal drug use... I be-lieve professional basketball will prosper. Better attendance, higher TV ratings, more endorsement opportunities all lead to more reveoues for the players to share. Tied with this is the fan perception that the players will be playing at all times at their highest possible skill

Third, with reports of large increases in drug use in professional sports as well as in society in general we all felt we had a responsibility, as role models, to change the trend. Eighty percent of our players are black. The kids in the inner cities idolize NBA players, and we felt it critical that these children hear our message loud and clear: NBA players won't use drugs and, if they do, they will be kept out of the league. Our players have made many appearances in the playgrounds and gymnasiums of the cities. I have done it several times. We have told them that drugs and basketball don't mix, that they must keep their lives straight. Now wheo we tell them to stay away from drugs, they will have reason to listen.

some players come to the NBA having used drugs. Maybe our stance will convince the National Collegiate Athletic Association to try to help the student athlete eliminate his problem. But oot all the reaction to the indicated that the players' stance was too harsh. This was a concern: after all, this union represents all our players. But we felt strongly that the most humanitarian approach was to help all our member: by making the league stronger, and help those of our players who had a drug problem to eliminate that problem. To date education and counseling haven't been enough. Three of our all-star players . David Thompson, Michael Ray Richardson and John Drew — admitted they needed help, all since January. We believe that the com-program was favorable. Some have

I believe this message will also help in the colleges. Undoubtedly, bination of education, counseling and penalties that are meaningful will help reduce and eliminate drug dependence. We have written a program that provides due-process protection for all our members, a major factor in entering into this agreement. No player can be treated unfairly or unequally under this system, or if they are, the program will be terminated. No superstar will be protected, oo 12th man will be sacrificed. After the period of amnesty and voluntary "coming forward," it is hoped, we will find a league that will be drug-free.

OBSERVER

On-the-Job Entraining

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON — Here is a television commercial trying to sell household computers:

In the first shot Mom, Dad and Son are at the quaint old railroad depot. Mom and Dad wave Son goodbye as the train pulls out. Soo is off to college to realize the American dream: A future with an expense account and so many tax lawyers the IRS will never lay a paw on his annual income.

In the next shot the train is pulling into the same depot it just left. Mom and Dad are standing there looking lugubrious, and no wonder. There is Son about to disembark with his luggage. He looks wretched. He has been kicked out

The invisible narrator says the lad lacked the computer savvy oeeded to pass. Mom and Dad didn't buy him a computer when he was a little boy.

Do you want this to happen to your child? If not, better buy a computer at once. The narrator recommends the computer made by the sponsor.

I have a lot of trouble with this commercial, starting with the railroad depot departure. Somewhere American youngsters may still take off for college from beautiful an-tique railroad depots, but only those who live in Switzerland. Knowing the condition of American railroads, I suspect the boy oever arrived at college. Moreover, I suspect Dad knew all along that he wouldn't. Dad, after all, is old enough to know you can't get anywhere in the United States by railroad anymore.

And we know - the narrator has told us - that Dad is such a cheapskate he wouldn't buy his son a computer. A man who wouldn't buy his child a computer isn't likely to bankrupt himself to pay today's prices for that child's college edu-

It would have been easy for Dad to hoodwink the boy onto a train. He was canny enough not to equip the lad with a computer, so that when be said, "Sure TI send you to college — by railroad," the boy wouldn't have the hardware to hook into an airline computer and discover how to get to college in 95

This probably explains the

wretched expression on the boy's face as the train returns to the depot: After three days of eating cold cheese sandwiches from the dining car's coin-machine kitchen, the boy has finally realized that Dad douhle crossed him.

HET ACTION OF

All right, let's give Dad the benefit of the doubt and assume the boy finally did arrive at college despite the railroad, and flunked out. Here is a boy who has never worked out on his own computer and doubtless can't tell a cursor from a RAM.

There have been a lot of boys like this. Albert Einstein and William Shakespeare come to mind. Their basic experience was with paper and pencil. If they had arrived at college, found themselves sur-rounded by computer wizards who were already 12 years ahead of them in mechanical knowbow, would they have hurled themselves into courses where success was going to be measured by their compoter skills? I think Einstein would have said. "No. I think I'll just sit around with my paper and pencil and let my mind amble around in mathematical theory." And Shakespeare: "Play writing is probably more up my alley than engineering."

The commercial aims to make Mom and Dad feel guilty about the boy's failure. What nonsense. Morn and Dad have nothing to feel guilty about. The boy is so dumb be deserves to be kicked out, and no computer ever made will belp him overcome his obvious inability to make a sensible judgment of his situation

Finally though, there is something nasty about this sales pitch. It is being seen by many, many moms and dads who cannot afford household compoters for their children, many of whom probably have trou-ble affording shoes for them.

Advertising like this places a heavy burden of guilt on such parents. A loving parent, after being told he will be a rotten human being if he doesn't provide an expensive machine necessary to save his children from failure, might be driven to felonious activity to give his child a break in life.

If so, stealing home computers may replace theft of television sets as the United States's principal burgling activity.

Everyday Rebellions

Gloria Steinem Has Found That Revolutions Take a Bit More Time

By Elisabeth Burniller Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Gloria Steinem is interested in revolution, but revolutions take time.

In the meantime, she contents herself with everyday rebellions. She won't get married, says she never wanted children and has written that if men could menstruate "they would brag about how long and how much." She thinks that sons-in-law sleep their way to the top, says that someday she's going to yell "Oh, you love it, honey!" during a male rape scene in a movie theater and doesn't give dinner parties because "I would, in about 10 minutes, turn into this person who's saying this saucer goes with that cup." She is — at six months short of 50 — her own best testimony that women become more radical as they grow older.

It has been 20 years since Steinem first squeezed into her electric-blue Bunny outfit to expose the cheap carnality at the New York Playboy Club, Il years since she started Ms., a magazine whose emphasis on women's culture was considered so narrow that her friends thought it would hurt her career, and three years since her mother -a woman disturbed by terrible voices and who Steinem looked after during her teen-age years - finally found peace in death at 81.

To trace Steinem's past two decades is to trace feminism from its rise to its backlash; through every battle and triumph she has been there: writer, lecturer, symbol.

She is one of the handful of people who can look around and see the sweeping social change she helped to cause, from day-care centers to abortion rights to women who stop her and say, "You changed my life." Ms. magazine, however unsophisticated it may seem to those who com-plain of its victim mentality, has still helped millions of women get through the day. To them, Gloria Steinem has made the difference.

But she is also living in a time when young women at her own alma mater call her an anachronism. Her role is more complicated - and more questioned - than ever. People at parties roll their eyes when she complains about a sexist joke, and Betty Friedan, the rival she has barely spoken to in 15 years, has taken a more mainstream road by writing, as she did in "The Second Stage," that the early feminists neglected the importance of the family.

Yet if the world has taken a half-step back, or if the movement has lost its old passion. Steinem has not.

"There is nothing outside of it." she says. "I once thought I would do this for two or three years and then go home to my real life. But that was a symptom of the movement's tone at the time, which was, 'Surely, if we just explain to everybody how unjust this is, they will want to fix it." She laughs. "What else would I do? Even if I were to end up poor and a bag lady, I could organize the other bag ladies."

This fall she's traveling to 26 cities in the United States to peddle her book, "Outrageous Acts and Everyday Rebellions." It cootains two new essays, but the rest is a collection of her earlier work, including "Transsexualism" and "The Real Linda Lovelace."

Her family is at Ms. magazine oo West 40th Street in New York City, a collection of women in blue jeans who bring their young children to the day-care center at work. She is the more glamorous mother hen. "Gloria, I'm pregnant!" one colleague says on a recent day, coming up for a hug. "Our second in utero baby," Steinem responds excitedly, then points to a young boy who is touring the halls in his toy car. "And this is our first. We sent to central casting to get him." She laughs, turns to a photographer, and asks, "Should we take a picture of him to bumanize the joint?"

She looks just like the 1960s Steinem. Her old friends and imitators have cut their hair, but Steinem's is still long and straight, parted right down the middle to frame aviator glasses and a delicate face. She gets exasperated when people ask why she still looks the same. "Why don't people ask Ralph Nader that?" she says. At 49, her skin is smooth, her nails beautifully tapered and her arms and legs more slender than when she first wowed New York with her raspberry Levis and miniskirts. There is a certain eccentricity to Gloria Steinem, an odd ambivalence between her private life and her cause. Behind the revolutionary who inspired so much change is a woman who seems overwhelmed by the very things she helped others to master. She still lives like the girl-justmaking-the-rent that she once was, consuming entire Sara Lee cakes at a single sitting, then not eating anything else for several days. She still turns in her stories messy and late, worries about the bills and can't save money. She has never learned to drive. "She just doesn't know how to get from here to there," sighs her friend Letty Pogrebin. But she does know what matters. She often huddles after speeches in the corner of lecture halls, organizing shelters for battered women and day-care centers. Last month in Boston, she helped find a lawyer for a woman who said her husband had raped a 13-year-old daughter. A.M., pouring out troubles. "I used to call her and say, I just can't write," says Jane O'Reilly, an old colleague. "And she'd always send money, warm food or sentences." If it happened to be a problem with a man, O'Reilly remembers. "Gloria was never the kind to give you some remembers, "Gloria was never the kind to give you some neavy-duty rap. I mean, you fall in love with a Republican.

What are you going to do?"

The Republican is Stanley Pottinger, an assistant attoroey general from the Nixon and Ford administrations. Steinem has known him for nine years. Friends have always found the relationship a little peculiar, given her politics, but if you ask her about it, she will smile sweetly and say: "Do you think Democrats are different?"

She is much easier on her own kind. Gloria Steinem has always been a woman who likes other women, and even if many of them find her intimidating at first, they eventually blurt out the private things they hadn't meant to say. She is nice, intense, a slick talk-show guest, a good lecturer and a less-than-graceful writer — unless the subject is something close to ber, like the mother she describes in "Ruth's Song," or the world of tail tweakings in "I Was a Playboy Bunny."

These days she's glad to see talk of a woman vice president, although she tempers it by saying, "Mondale could benefit from baving a woman vice president, but Reagan could not. Any woman who became vice president to Ronald Reagan, considering his current policies, would simply lose her credibility."

She says the gender gap has been around for years, but thinks that nobody ooticed until Reagan made it partisan.
"If women are equally discootent with both presidential

Making people believe "anything is possible."

candidates, the press doesn't care," she says. "If women's opinions might dictate which man gets elected, the press

She still says she'll never get married. "It's not an equal partnership. I mean, you lose your name, your credit rating, your legal residence, and socially you're treated as if his identity were yours. People I love I don't want to live with all the time. I like to have my own spartment. I can't imagine being married. In the abstract, it's clear that some people have to pioneer being single, just as some people have to pioneer loving, equal partnerships. If everybody has to get married, then clearly it a prison, not a choice."

Gloria Steinem is tired of questions about why the women's movement died. She says it's not dead or even sick, but has instead spread out from the middle class to be integrated into issues like unemployment and the gender gap. Feminism, she says, has brought the United States closer to the democracy it ought to be, and has found words like sexual harassment for events that "10 years ago were called life." She sees four enormous goals ahead: reproductive freedom, democratic families, a depoliticized culture and work redefined."

At the same time, there is that sense that feminism, like any trend of the 1960s, is over now. Ms. is less-than-hot reading on the nation's campuses, and a student editor at Barnard College actually says Vogue is more popular.

"The point is not to make people grateful," says Steinem. "I want them to believe that anything is possible. The fact that they do believe anything is possible is

"Remember. We are talking about overthrowing, or humanizing — pick your verb, depending on how patient you feel — the sex and race caste systems. Now that is a big job."

As Gloria Steinem knows, revolutions take time.

Most members of a cancelled 1,700-mile raft trip down the uncharted upper Yangtze River are expected to leave China Friday to return to the United States. The trip, which left Portland, Oregon, several weeks behind schedule, had been beset by problems, with various team members dropping out along the way and delays in getting equipment. Steve Kadel, a reporter on the Vancouver (Washington) Columbian, who is on the trip, reported Sunday that Ken Warren of Portland, Oregon, the expedition leader, plans to stay on to track down money he said is missing. "I am not leaving China until we learn where the $150,400 has been deposited and we are able to discuss the entire situation with the Chinese government and get their official permission to conduct the expedition in 1984," said Warren, who added that his wife would remain with him.

Raymonde Montague Sacklyn is not an ambassador, only a jaywalker, a Hong Kong court ruled Tuesday, fining the editor of a financial newsletter 50 Hong Kong dollars (about $6 U.S.) for jaywalking. The court refused Sacklyn diplomatic immunity as ambassador of Hutt immunity as ambassador of Hutt River Province Principality, a 29-square-mile (75-square-hikometer) principality in Western Australia set up by the farmer "prince" Leon-ard Casley in a protest against tax-ation in 1979. Sacklyn appeared in court in a morning coat and ambassadorial sash in cream brocade, and his lawyers said the offense should be dealt with by the International Court of Justice in the Hague. The Hong Kong government termed the argument "an embarrassment" and the court agreed.
